

When Stories End

Chapter 1 by Hailee Sexton

I have never in my life been able to determine if this is a blessing or a curse. I have had many mishaps while traveling between stories, but none like this. The thought of being able to travel between stories is pretty awesome, but right then, I would've killed to be doing absolutely anything else.

Although story traveling (ST) is really fun, there is one catch: While I'm wandering around in the story's plot, someone is reading the story aloud, and if I don't make it back to my normal life before they finish reading, I'm stuck in the story forever.

The way I get into the story is by reading a set of words out of my story book that my ST teacher gave me. The book was written by Miel Kender, the discoverer of ST. There is an Entrance Set and an Exit Set for every story ever written and it is a magic book so it updates on it's own every time a new story is written. When I read a the Entrance Set, I am sent through a portal called Kender's Hole, obviously named after Miel Kender. When I read the Exit Set, I am sent through the same portal to get back home.

Unfortunately, this time I went into a story, it was a challenge from my teacher. I hadn't read the story yet so I didn't know what to expect. I read the Entrance Set and entered into the story. I found myself laying across train tracks. I could faintly hear the sound of a train whistling.

It was coming towards me.

I tried to move, but I couldn't.

escape before time ran out, but for some reason, I couldn't think. My mind just wouldn't cooperate. That's when I just gave up on my dignity and started screaming for help, hoping someone would hear my calls.
